##You're almost at the finish line with your revision project. It's just one more chapter to wrap up and close the book. When revising and you need more time to write, you may get inspired by a new research. To keep you on track, researchers have written research methods, theory and models that cover a wide range of topics that all address the nature of a revision project. Research Methods and Models Experts from the world of social psychology and educational technology use research methods and models to explain what is behind the revision project. We will look at four models, related to a social perspective, knowledge, motivation, and behaviour, and how they can be used to explain the nature of a revision project. Relevant models that could help to understand revision Journal writing is an effective way to complete a research project. But if you are just starting out or already doing a lot of other research, it can feel much harder to find enough time to go back and write more. That's why you should start by looking at the research methods and models that could help you through your project. Researchers have made several types of research papers, theoretical papers and meta-analysis available on the web. These types of papers could help to understand the research of others and how to extend it to your own research. We will look at some of the most useful models for researchers in this article. Two views from the past: A social perspective Revision is a lot about change. It's about the process of change, and it's about how to change. To understand the nature of a revision project you should first look at how people revise and why they do so. Indeed, people use different strategies when they revise. They adopt either a global view or a selective view when they want to learn something new or revise their project. Experts say that in both of the two cases, revising is about the interplay of expectation and experience. Also, researchers have shown that people are more motivated and perform better when they use a global approach to learning. Therefore, most people will adopt a global perspective, because they want to know everything. In turn, that is the reason why they can't learn anything new, because they are overwhelmed by the information they already
