{#cpr12759-sec-0001} ===== Glucose and lipids are major nutrients for developing an embryo and supplying fuel to the brain and skeletal muscle, respectively. It is well known that control of glucose and lipid metabolism is essentially important during the development of the central nervous system (CNS) and energy, especially adipose tissue (AT) is indispensable to ensure the survival, maturation and function of neurons and glial cells.1{ref-type="ref"} Conversely, glucose and fatty acids (FAs) affect development and function of neural tissues.1{ref-type="ref"},

2{ref-type="ref"},

3{ref-type="ref"} Glucose and FAs have been shown to affect the development of neurons and
