Acetylcholinesterase (AChE) is the enzyme involved in the hydrolysis of acetylcholine, a neurotransmitter whose neurotransmitter function is essential for the integrity of the cholinergic system. In the present study, the genomic organization of the ACHE gene and two of its variants is described. The transcription start point is located at base pair 10,964. Transcription of the ACHE gene shows a complex pattern of expression that has to be further investigated. Our results show the presence of all splice variants known so far and the identification of two new ones.
