Serine proteases are a widely distributed family of proteolytic enzymes some of which have been implicated in allergic and inflammatory responses in the airways. Previous studies have indicated that allergen-specific IgE-dependent mast cell activation in allergic asthma is mediated by activation of the serine protease, tryptase. We have shown recently that rat lung mast cells express both tryptase and a chymotryptic tryptase. Of these two tryptases, only tryptase is activated by an immunodominant determinant of the rat allergen ovalbumin. Therefore, tryptase is likely to be one of the mediators of the rat mast cell response to ovalbumin. We have also shown that mouse bone marrow derived mast cells express only a single type of
