Check out the video above for an overview of some of the features. Over five years ago, FIFA 10 introduced 'Fluid Dribbling,' and it set a new benchmark in motion simulation for years to come. With FIFA 22, we're delivering over a year's worth of additional motion capture data capture from 22 real-life top players. With 'HyperMotion Technology,' we're able to drive and animate the new, more fluid dribbling system without relying on computer animation. But we're not just using motion capture data to animate dribbling or creating new dribbling mechanics. We're also using it to animate player movement, tackle, and throw the ball. And, just like in FIFA 10, we're using it to animate the animations and animations-in-transition as players move from one animation to another. It's fair to say that FIFA 22 will be the most responsive, realistic football game ever created when it launches on August 27, 2016. The following gameplay footage was captured at EA Play Paris 2016 on May 15th, 2016. * The Sink-or-Flip feature will be available during a football game and will signal a free ball challenge from the opponent. You and your teammates will then sprint to the centre circle and try to win possession. The speed and fluidity with which the video cuts from top to bottom, highlights above, and between the white and yellow lines, indicates the level of gameplay quality that will be on display when FIFA 22 launches on August 27, 2016. Gameplay Changes from FIFA 21 to FIFA 22 Fast Player Movement FIFA 21 introduced "Smart Running", which allows players to run at full speed until they need to slow down for a pass. Smart Running allows players to run faster without compromising control. However, players have historically been unable to sprint and pass at the same time. This caused the ball to slip through players and the system to slow down. To address this, we've completely redesigned how players run, dribble and sprint in FIFA 22. This will not only improve animation quality, but it will also make the player movements more fluid and predictable, which will be felt by the player during gameplay.

- GOLES FIFA's most advanced goal-line technology yet has ensured more on-pitch action to your liking.
- FINISH On target, feel the thud! A more advanced algorithm ensures that no goalkeeper can let in a last-minute winner, and a slightly more even flight distance makes the ball appear to be heading to a spot on the goal-line.

FIFA is a series of soccer video games developed by EA Canada, published by EA Sports, and distributed worldwide by Electronic Arts. The game has been released on numerous platforms, including platforms for personal computers, video game consoles, and the iPhone and iPad. FIFA series games have spawned many console, handheld, and PC sports game titles. These include the FIFA series, FIFA Street, EA Sports Active, FIFA Street Soccer, and the EA Sports FIFA Street series. Not to be confused with EA Canada's 2004 launch title, FIFA 2005, it is the title of the franchise's latest installment (for the current generation of video game consoles). Like all other installments, it was developed and published by EA Canada. The latest generation of console video game consoles and computers is the sixth generation (since the seventh generation is referred to as current generation). Contents Seasons The FIFA series takes place over several years, which correlate to real football seasons. Unlike the real game, the FIFA seasons follow the same calendar year (e.g. EA Sports FIFA Soccer 2006 takes place over the 2005-2006 seasons). In real football, the seasons are separated into an autumn and winter period. Thus, if the football season ended during the summer, it would be the autumn season. EA SPORTS FIFA 22 launches with Seasons Mode, where you'll play a fantasy game where there is no difference between the seasons. This allows new players to play online on any course of the game without getting confused by the story. There have been 8 FIFA Seasons so far, with the Fall (Autumn) season starting at the end of September and the Winter (Winter) season beginning in December. The newest installment will be the Fall season of the 2011-2012 season. FIFA Seasons Online A short time after the release of the game, the developers released an Online mode where you can meet up with your friends to play head-to-head with each other. You can download content for offline play, as well as download various tournaments for single-player play. The offline aspect of the game allows you to play as if you were a real footballer. You can unlock items to use in-game, play tournaments and show off your skills. Offline play does not have any progression, and will not get better on its own. Online play is intended for competition with friends (over the internet). The online play of Seasons Mode is called Online Seasons and is available
