Table 5-1 describes the different types of digital cameras, what kind of images they capture, and how they differ in various ways. Table 5-1 Digital Camera Types Type | Used for | Pictures --- | --- | --- Digital single lens reflex camera (DSLR) | Professional/amateur | JPG/JPEG (most common), TIFF, other more exotic file formats Point-and-shoot camera | Average to intermediate | JPG/JPEG, TIFF, other more exotic file formats Compact camera | Average or beginner | JPG/JPEG, TIFF, other more exotic file formats _The camera mentioned in the example in this table is Canon PowerShot A570, courtesy of Canon Inc._ Regardless of type, you're always better off purchasing the camera that best matches your needs. Here are a few factors to consider when you're shopping: * Resolution Resolution refers to the number of pixels in the image file. Most high-quality cameras use a resolution of at least 8 megapixels. * Megapixels The megapixel rating on a camera tells you the number of pixels in an image that's captured. Every megapixel, of course, adds quality — which leads to brighter, sharper, more detailed images. However, that comes at the price of _more_ memory and storage space. * Shutter speed The _shutter speed_ refers to the time the camera sensor stays open (on the shutter) between

A community-based intervention to reduce driver injury-related crashes and injuries in U.S. military personnel deployed to Iraq. Malian combat forces stationed in Iraq are at increased risk for injury and death from traffic accidents. Early, simple, and inexpensive interventions are needed to reduce the risk of injury from motor vehicle collisions. This study evaluated the effect of a community-based intervention to promote driver safety on injury-related crashes and injuries among Malian combat forces deployed to Iraq. This was a cluster-randomized, controlled trial. Four U.S. Army hospitals in Iraq were randomly assigned to an intervention (n = 196) or control group (n = 195). Patients were measured in the intervention group before and after the intervention. During the 6-month study period, 10,236 patients were admitted. Outcome data were available for 10,125 subjects (range, n = 10,242-10,138). The study's primary outcome was the rate of injury-related crashes and injuries. Secondary outcomes included the rate of injury-related hospitalizations and patient satisfaction with their care. Three hundred thirty-five crashes occurred during the 6-month study period. Crashes decreased by 60% (95% confidence interval [CI], -70 to -47%) after the intervention among patients who had a crash before the intervention compared with before the intervention, and the intervention had no effect on the rate of crashes among patients who had a crash after the intervention compared with after the intervention (0.44 crashes per patient-month [95% CI, -0.58 to -0.31]). A secondary analysis demonstrated that the intervention decreased the rate of injury-related hospitalizations by 42% (95% CI, -66 to -18%) and decreased patient satisfaction with their care. Rates of injury-related crashes and injuries decreased after a community-based, low-cost intervention promoted driver safety in Malian combat forces deployed to Iraq. This intervention should be considered in future studies of active-duty populations in countries with high rates of motor vehicle collisions. 1 0 f o r g . 4 L e t w (n) = 2 * n * * 3 - 3 * n * * 2 - 2 * n + 3 .

The present study investigated the involvement of the nucleus of the solitary tract (NTS), ventrolateral medulla (VLM), area postrema (AP), paraventricular nucleus (PVN) of the hypothalamus (PVNp), area of the reticular formation (RF) at the level of the spinal cord (RF(sc)) and the lower brainstem (RF(lb)) in central autonomic processing of abdominal viscerosomatic signals. These structures were investigated in adult male rats by means of immunocytochemistry and in situ hybridization histochemistry using beta-Fos as a marker of neuronal activity. Unilateral noxious (20 microl of 1M acetic acid) or sham injections were given into the gastric serosal wall. Noxious stimulation increased Fos expression in the NTS, VLM and AP when compared with sham stimulation. However, similar reactions were observed in structures
